

DAY 9

Today is your day!

It's time to declare your dream.

It's not anything to feel pressure from. This isn't setting in stone the entirety of your life or anything like that (although it may, which is exciting to think about). Remember, dreams can change. Your dream might change tomorrow, and that's fine. But, you have to start somewhere. You have to face a direction. Today is that day.

Declaring your dream is important because it makes it more real. If your dream is something that stays hidden away in your head or your heart and nobody ever knows about it but you, then you are far less likely to do anything about it. By simply writing it down and sharing it with people, it makes your dream more than a thought. If it stays a thought you don't share, it's easy to dismiss as a "wish" or a "fantasy" or "impossible" when you're facing a challenge. You can't let that happen, and so this is your first real test. This is your first chance to overcome a challenge as a Dream Chaser. Write your dream down.

What is your dream?

Your next step is to take it even further.

Something you have to know is that the more you see your dream, the more you say your dream, the more you share your dream, the more you do anything related to your dream, the more you will believe it.

That's crucial, because another thing you have to know is that it's not easy to chase a dream. In fact, it's hard. Really hard.

So, what you need to do is consistently expose yourself to your dream. Start now. See if you can complete all the things on this special Dream Challenge List.

DREAM CHALLENGE LIST

- 1. Share your dream with at least one adult.
- 2. Share your dream with at least one friend.
- 3. Write your dream down and put it somewhere you'll see it every day.
- 4. Say your dream aloud at least once a day.